Patient Advisors

Home and Community Care

How do patient advisors help?

Patient advisors help the ESC LHIN ensure that we are providing patient-and family-centred care by:

- Sharing their story. Patient advisors help by talking about their own health care experiences with health service providers, ESC LHIN staff, and other patients
- Participating in committee work. Patient advisors bring their unique perspectives to committee tables at the ESC LHIN
- Creating and reviewing informational materials for patients. Patient advisors help review and/or create materials such as health information handouts, forms, discharge instructions, and website pages. Patient advisors help us make these materials meaningful and easy to understand
- Working on short-term projects. The ESC LHIN asks patient advisors to help us in making improvements to our organization for the benefit of our patients and their family members

Should I apply to be a patient advisor?

Being a patient advisor may be a good match for your skills and experience if you can:

- Work with staff to help improve community care for others
- Talk about your experiences as a patient or family member, but also think beyond that experience
- Work with people who share different values, beliefs, and wishes from you
- Listen to and think about what others say, even when you disagree
- Bring a positive attitude to discussions
- Keep any information that you may hear as an advisor private and confidential

Who can be a patient advisor?

You can be a patient advisor if you, a family member, or a friend received care from the ESC LHIN, formerly known as the ESC Community Care Access Centre, within the past five years. No clinical skills are required.

You do not need any special qualifications to be an advisor. Your experience as a patient, family member, and/or caregiver of a patient is the most important qualification. We will provide you with any other training you may need.

What is a patient advisor?

Patient advisors are the “voice” of patients and their families and caregivers who receive care at the Erie St. Clair Local Health Integration Network (ESC LHIN).

Patient advisors partner with our staff and health care providers to improve the quality of home and community care.

A patient advisor is someone who:

- Volunteers their time (typically one to four hours per month)
- Gives advice to the ESC LHIN based on their experience as a patient, family member, and/or caregiver
- Works with staff to improve the patient experience
- Works with staff for either short-or long-term commitments, depending on the project
